Fines and Punishments: Why You Need a Solid Pennsylvania DUI Lawyer by Williamdenardo

Article published on August 22nd 2012 | Business

The laws in the state of Pennsylvania are very harsh. The reason for this should not be difficult to deduce. Through ensuring the penalties for drunk driving remain severe, the authorities can present a strong deterrent against people drinking and driving. However, there will be those instances when a person opts to get behind the wheel of a car while legally - but unknowingly -- intoxicated. If you have done this and were pulled over by the police, you definitely will need to discuss the matter with a reputable and qualified Pennsylvania DUI lawyer. Access to an established and consistently effective DUI lawyer is a must when you have been charged in the Keystone State. You will find the penalties levied at you to be rather strict.

Per the laws in Pennsylvania, if you have been convicted of a DUI on a first offense, the fine will be in the range of $300. This relatively low amount shows that there is an understanding that people can make one-time mistakes. However, the fines and potential penalties increase significantly for subsequent offenses: A second DUI conviction can lead to a fine of up to $2500. Anyone convicted of a third offense could face a fine of up to $5000. Avoiding paying the extremely high fines is reason enough to seek out the help of a qualified DUI lawyer in Montgomery County, PA. Frequently, a successful lawyer can petition the court for a lower fine and do so successfully based upon the particulars of the case.

While the fines are significant, there are other penalties that can be levied when you have been convicted of a DUI. A Pennsylvania DUI lawyer might very well be able to protect you against having your license suspended for a full 12 months in the aftermath of being convicted on a second or third DUI offense. When your license is suspended, you will find yourself in a very difficult situation. Not being able to drive your car means you may not be able to travel to work easily - if at all. Your situation can further be compounded by the fact your ability to take care of many normal aspects of daily life will be undermined when you cannot drive. This alone is reason enough to seek out a qualified DUI lawyer in Montgomery County, PA who can address the charges against you in a way that keeps you from losing your license for an extended period of time.

Of course, the most serious of all implications facing someone charged with driving under the influence would be the jail time associated with a conviction. A second offense could lead to five days to six months in jail. For the third offense, you will discover that the jail time is in the range of ten days to upwards of two years. Without proper legal representation, you could discover the sentence levied at you could be severe.

The important point here is that you cannot face a judge in PA without an experienced Pennsylvania DUI lawyer in your corner. A DUI charge is very serious. You must be sure you have the best possible representation.
