

Article published on January 3rd 2012 | Education

History is studded with wars so war essays are usually a part of almost every kind of studies, therefore, student has to be prepared to fight with the intricacies involved in world war essay writing. There are myriad war essay topics from cold war essay to World War I to II and the list goes on. The biggest connotation of writing war essay is that it should be based on factual evidences otherwise it will lose its beauty.

Students, thereby, has to be quite informative about the war so as to complete the essay, world war essay are also based on three major components like the other types that are: introduction, body and conclusion our of which we would be discussing here the first part that is the introduction.

To come up with a good piece of writing, one has to be craft a good introduction because it is the first thing that a reader reads after the topic of the war essay. Following is a guideline for writing a good introduction for World War II essay in less than an hour.

How to write an effective introduction

On Iraq war:

Thesis statement:

Your thesis statement should focus on the main idea of the Iraq war for example; if we take the theme of why George W Bush attacked on Iraq? The answer would be "the president of United States of America attacked on Iraq in the name of destroying the weapons of mass destruction which is still going on without any apparent reason". See, in two minutes we crafted the thesis statement, this is how you would be developing a thesis statement for Iraq war essay.

Opening statement:

You know your thesis statement, now you should be working on the opening sentence that should be answering the thesis statement in a bit detail but don't just jump on the real answer. For example; George W Bush has still not justified the reason for attacking on Iraq...you may start somewhat like this.

On World War I:

Thesis statement:

Again, you have to first develop the theme of the world war I essay, there could be many themes associated with world war I such as; implications of the world war I or causes or Europe etc. Let's say if you take the example of Europe then the thesis statement would be something like this; "The biggest change that World War I bring in the world was the downfall of Europe".

Opening sentence:

Here, you can directly tell the cause of the World War I in your World War I essay so that the reader takes interest in reading the rest of the essay. For example; "The colonization and the imperialistic foreign policies of the European nation resulted in the world war".

Therefore, this is how you can effectively sort out the problems related to the introduction for war essay, you must have noticed that every time we divided the introduction into two parts that are the thesis statement and the opening sentence, this is how you can do as well for writing a good introductory paragraph.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/two-ideas-for-writing-war-essay-introduction.htm> - Article Side

Samcollier - About Author:

Sam Collier is a senior research writer and provide help for a war essays and a world war essay. Feel free to contact for any sort of help in this regard.

Article Keywords:

war essay, war essays, world war essay, World War I essay, World War II essay

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!