Many a times we find men and boys with slight enlargement or even a visibly developed breast. There is usually some hormonal play that results in most cases of breast development among men while a few cases may just be a false alarm as a result of general weight gain.

The hormonal cases also tend to go away on their own after a time duration. For example, some new born male babies may show slight swelling in the chest area that is absolutely an effect of female hormones around child birth and subsides in a few weeks time. Similarly, while attaining puberty and adulthood, boys undergo hormonal changes and may show slight breast development that usually recedes after hormonal stabilisation.

Now, coming to cases that do not get resolved on their own, such situations can prove embarrassing for the person concerned. These cases may require what is referred to as a male breast reduction surgery. Mostly, in such a surgery, a mass of fat and tissues is removed surgically from underneath the male chest region to result in a firm look to the male chest. Usually, boys and adults faced with such a kind of breast development or gynecomastia (the medical term for male breast development), suffer from low esteem and have shown significant improvement in personality after undergoing the male breast reduction surgery.

So, while men are suffering and dealing with enlarged breast symptoms, women look forward to bettering their body contour through breast augmentation and artificial breast implants to look fuller and better. Such a surgery is also performed for women who have undergone metastasis.

Usually, women who feel less endowed with feminine structure and have small breasts opt for breast augmentation through breast implants. An increase in breast size and also Breast Lift has become popular with the present day generation of women who want to flaunt their feminine self with low necklines showing off their firm and full breasts. Women having lost the firmness despite having good sized breast, go in for breast lifts to get back the youthful self.

The Breast Augmentation and breast implant surgeries involve inserting silicone breast implants under the female breast tissues or muscles to give a bigger look to the breast - post surgery. Usually, small incisions are made at certain areas near breast to insert the implant.

Those seeking a breast implant surgery need to understand the related risks and also the dos and don'ts with regard to the procedure before going under the knife so as to get complete satisfaction from the procedure.

Meanwhile, for breast lift, only the skin, muscles and loose tissues are firmed up with a surgical procedure, thus the process being comparatively risk free. Still, the procedure does call for proper consultation with your cosmetic surgeon to understand all the necessary processes. Women who have lost firmness in breast after a considerable weight loss or child birth are the right candidates for breast lift procedure.
