Types of Female Hormone Therapies by James Blee

Article published on February 22nd 2012 | Health

Hormone therapy is nothing but the use of hormone in the medical cure of an individual. Hormones can be effectively used to treat a lot of diseases. When the talk is about the female hormone therapy, it is mainly about the treatment of the breast cancers or the setting of the menopause in them.

It can be said without any doubt that cancer is one of the deadliest diseases and doctors are still unable to find a fitting reply for it. Hormone therapy can be used successfully to alleviate this disease. The treatment of cancer by using hormone is just too easy. It is injecting the steroid hormones into the endocrine glands of the patient. This will help in the modification of the hormonal levels of the resulting in the death of the cancerous cells thus halting their further growth. The parts where the hormones are most likely to have a dominant effect, these are the parts where the female hormone therapy can be used to treat them..

There are two distinct approaches taken by the female hormone therapy to cure breast cancer. It decreases the amount of estrogen hormone present in the body of the victim and the effect of the hormone on the deadly cancerous cells. The cells of the breast cancer are affected by hormone. Thus, this therapy performs two different actions such minimizing the effect of the estrogen hormone on the breast cells after the surgical removal of the cancerous cells and keeping the cancerous cells in check when the woman is going through a critical phase in the disease.

In the menopause stage of a woman's life, her menstruation cycle stops. The beginning of menopause is started when the female body manufactures less female hormones like estrogen and progesterone. Via female hormone therapy, the problem can be cured by directly injecting estrogen and progestin collectively or only estrogen.
