

Article Side

7 Dog Obedience Tips and 1 Secret to Success by Jacklyn Wise

Article published on August 4th 2012 | Pets

Need some dog obedience tips? Read on. You can't force your dog to obey any more than you can command a tree to grow, but there are some tips that will make the process a whole lot more successful, plus one crucial secret to success.

Tips for Dog Obedience:

Friendship, not force. Speaking of force, that's usually not the way to go with dog training. Training in a loving way will lay the foundation for a long-lasting friendship between you and your dog. Leave off the harsh methods, and employ encouragement wherever possible.

Short lessons are better lessons. Your pet is not ready for hour-long training sessions. Instead, focus on training that is short and to the point. Attention spans vary from dog to dog, but training twice daily for 15 minutes at a stretch is a good rule of thumb.

Your enthusiasm level is important. You're the trainer, and everything about your training process is important, even your enthusiasm level. Dogs can sense moods, so try to keep things upbeat and exciting.

Gradually raise your goals. If you're excited about dog training, good. Keep it up. With all the excitement, remember to keep your goals realistic. Your puppy won't be jumping through hoops on day one of obedience training. Keep your goals modest, and gradually raise them as your dog reaches each goal.

Use treats. Before beginning dog training, go out and purchase a bag of treats. Treats are a primary reinforcement method in the dog training process. Use them.

Give your dog feedback. Communication is essential. If your dog has done something right, express it. If your dog has done something wrong, let her know. Always provide immediate and consistent feedback.

Avoid cool tricks at first. Your dog should first learn to be obedient. Tricks will come, but focus on the basics before going on to the complex.

One Secret to Success:

Now that you've heard the dog obedience tips, here is one secret to success in dog training. You've probably heard the mantra, "repetition aids learning," or the secret to learning is "repetition, repetition." At the risk of being repetitive, it's true. Repetition is absolutely critical, even in dog training. Dogs don't learn things instantaneously. In order to have an obedient dog, or a dog that can perform tricks on demand, you'll have to repeat your training countless times. You'll get tired of it. Your dog may even get tired of it, but in the end you will have accomplished your goal.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/pets-articles/7-dog-obedience-tips-and-1-secret-to-success.htm> - Article Side

Jacklyn Wise - About Author:

Jacklyn Wise need a way to train her dogs so she researched a dog training collars and obedience schools to see what would work for her special family member. Sit Means Sit can help you a find a dog trainer and has the products you need to help your pets.

Article Keywords:

dog training collars, find a dog trainer

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!