Before Hitting the Road: Things to Consider when Buying an SUV by Tyra Shortino

Buying an SUV is a big investment, mainly because of its price tag. Small to midsize SUVs can range from under $20,000 to $50,000, with the upscale models fetching at around $60,000. But aside from the price, there are other important things to consider when you're checking out SUVs.

Type of Driving

What type of driving do you usually do? Is it limited to going around the city? Take note that while an SUV provides more spacious interiors compared to smaller cars, this can also be the same factor that would make parking a little difficult. Small and compact SUVs offer good alternatives to that.

Towing and Mileage

Since traditional SUVs are truck-based, they have considerable towing capacity. Small, compact and midsize SUVs can be used for light duty hauling while the large models, due to their powerful V8 engines, can do heavy towing work. Keep in mind, though, that the larger towing capacity and the more powerful the engine an SUV has, the less fuel economy it can give.

Climate and Road Condition

Consider as well the climate and the road condition where you usually drive. If you drive mostly in sunny climate and on dry pavement, then an SUV with front-wheel or rear-wheel drive is perfect. For driving on roads wet with snow or ice, however, an all-wheel drive with good traction control is advisable. Now, if you plan to use the SUV often on off road conditions of rough terrain and steep ascents and descents, getting a full time four-wheel drive SUV available in Indianapolis Buy Here Pay Here dealerships is recommended.

Seating and Cargo

SUVs can seat at least five passengers while seven or eight adult passengers can sit comfortably in full size models. Maximum cargo space is offered since SUVs have flexible seating configuration. Second and third row seats are foldable or removable to make way for cargo. Indianapolis Buy Here Pay Here car lots offer SUVs with payload capacity much like pickups.

Safety Features

Due to their typical heavy weight, SUVs can be more of a challenge to handle as opposed to other automobiles. Seatbelts and side air bags, especially in the style of curtains are safety features to look out for since they give protection during rollover accidents. Consult the Indianapolis Buy Here Pay Here car dealer for the SUV with electronic stability control and traction control. These safety features are highly recommended.
