

Article Side

Buying Used Cars: the Best Reward for a Job Promotion by Tyra Shortino

Article published on March 23rd 2012 | Auto

You've made a few strides at putting your A-game at work, and finally, management has noticed your sacrifices. Suddenly, the big boss offers you a job position with a higher paycheck, a higher level job title, and the authority to boss your other colleagues around – which, in short, is a promotion. A promotion is the reward to an employee for significant work contributions. It's a colorful chapter in everyone's career as it signifies greater personal success.

If you've been promoted recently, then you deserve more than a pat on the back. What you need is to reward yourself for this remarkable achievement with something big, something beautiful, and something that hollers "Hello world, I've been promoted". If you know where this conversation is getting at, then it's about time to rush to the nearest car dealership.

Cars are more than just status symbols. The one you drive – or the one you're eyeing – may reflect a shard of your personality. According to some consumer psychologists who have studied car buyers and their needs, the specific car type or brand of vehicle people buy is a means to fulfilling an emotional need. Given this fact, it means that you need a car that upholds your corporate look.

When buying a car, the first concern should always be the budget. Determine how much you're willing to pay. If you're not married to the idea of owning a brand new car, then used cars make more financial sense. These days, used cars cost almost half the price of new ones, and come in excellent roadworthy condition. Also, you should establish a realistic monthly payment plan to avoid any debts.

After determining your budget range, you should go to the used car dealerships in Indianapolis Indiana. While there are virtually hundreds of cars that may catch your eye, it will all come down to one eventually. Examine your needs and wants objectively, and then find a car that fits this description. Don't make your final selection based on the car's appearance, as looks can be deceiving.

On the other hand, many car buyers overlook a vehicle's maintenance requirements. Remember that some cars are cheaper to buy, but are costlier to own. Every car is unique: one can depreciate at a much faster rate while the other may cost more to insure or maintain. Perform extensive research prior to visiting used car lots in Indianapolis Indiana.

Promotions don't happen every day. Although many employees have a shot at getting promoted, not everyone will be given this chance. It's only normal to reward yourself with something tangible for a job well done – and used car dealerships in Indianapolis Indiana know exactly what it is.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/auto-articles/buying-used-cars-the-best-reward-for-a-job-promotion.htm> - Article Side

Tyra Shortino - About Author:

For more details, search a used car dealerships in Indianapolis Indiana and a used car lots in Indianapolis Indiana in Google for related information.

Article Keywords:

used car dealerships in indianapolis indiana, used car lots in indianapolis Indiana

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!