The three R's strongly advocated for the sustainable development have finally made inroads to the electronic components also. There is a huge potential to both use and conserve resources when it comes to e-goods like mobile phones, the number of which is rising exponentially daily.

So with environment fans, the biggest thought on mind these days is how to recycle mobile phones. There are many recycle centers that accept old, broken and damaged mobile phones and dispose them very responsibly. However, most of the time the phones have suffered minor damages and with little touch up they are good enough to be resold and reused.

At other times however, the damage may be extensive and that is when the technical team guides them as to how to recycle mobile phones.

Only after carefully analyzing and testing the phone, studying the market value and demand, a price is offered to the client.

And going by the stringent tests and quality handling of the process, the price offered would be unmatched in the market. Again they do not send in the phones to be dumped at some remote landfill miles away. They genuinely reuse and recycle the phones.

They provide complete information about how to recycle mobile phones and keep the client informed and assisted at every step of the entire process. Most of the times when the damage is extensive, the mobile phones are dismantled to recover the precious metals. At other times, the working components are reused.

The difference that it makes to the conservation of the resources is tremendous as the demand is ever increasing. With newest gadgets coming in to the markets daily, the old ones become redundant and take up space either in attics or landfills. Most of the time, their components can be reused one way or the other.

The only thing is that there is a lack of awareness on how to recycle mobile phones. With the awareness campaigns and spreading of the message, however the concept is picking up. So it is not unusual to find a person walking up to the recycle phone booth and dropping in their mobile phone. And since all the parties are benefitted, it is always better to participate in the recycle phone drive.

The next time you look at the mobile phone, think of all the resources that go into its making and think of the sheer wastage that casually throwing away the mobiles leads to. And then maybe you can decide how to recycle mobile phones. You can choose to donate, resell, or recycle the phones. Every mobile phone recycled is a step further towards a greener and cleaner living.

The e-waste is increasing on a global level. Why make contribution to something that is potentially dangerous to the survival. Get to know how to recycle mobile phones and cultivate a healthier practice. We owe it to our children, our environment and most importantly to ourselves. And why wait for tomorrow? Let the change begin today. And let each one be a party to this change.
