The first thing to consider when arranging what you hope will be a great event, never to be forgotten by all those who attend, is exactly who it is that you would like to be there. The guest list is the foundation of any good party and could even prove to be more important than the next item on any good planner's list, the venue. To a large extent, the best place to book will depend on the people that you have invited and both these factors will be influenced by what type of event it is that you are planning.

A loud disco may be a great choice for an 18th birthday party but is unlikely to go down well with a group of people out celebrating a work colleague's retirement. However, it is never wise to judge such matters purely on the age of the guests so you should make sure that you are aware of what sort of people are on your guest list. Among the party venues Sydney has to offer are a number of excellent restaurants, many of which are themed establishments offering more than just good food to their customers.

If you think that a meal would be a good place to start when planning for an upcoming corporate event then it is worth phoning around a few places to see if they are prepared to offer a special deal for block bookings. It is also a good idea to bear in mind that the most popular venues are often booked up months in advance so if you wish to hold your party somewhere trendy, you will need to start planning it as soon as possible.

A restaurant with live music, a dance floor and a choice of tasty dishes is the ideal place for a variety of events, including anniversary parties, wedding celebrations and company outings. There are many such establishments in New South Wales's capital, with Latin dance clubs and eateries providing a party atmosphere that people of all ages tend to appreciate. However, it is best to check that all your guests will be happy with the type of food served at such places before you go ahead and make a booking.
