It happened for the first time in the month of January that the employers of Britain made an expansion as far as their permanent workforce is concerned. This revelation was made by a survey report that was released a few days back. This was also added to signs that the state of the economy is also improving and that the things are now getting better than what they were before. In a statement, The Recruitment and Employment Confederation said that after the months of September in the year 2011, there permanent staff placement has seen a high of 51.2 from 48.5 in relation to the reading which was above 50 line separating growth after the contraction is concerned.

Kevin Green, Chief Executive REC said that after all this improvement there are good chances that the condition of the job market of the country is going to get better. A report on the jobs had some good figures as far as data on services was concerned and what was expected from the Purchasing Managers' Index, a few days ago. It is being said that levels of confidence are rising about the jobs as far as businesses and consumers are concerned.

Along with this in the month of January the dominant sector which is the services sector in the country of United Kingdom is also growing at a past pace in the last 10 months. In addition to this, the rate of employment has also gone up with quite a good figure that is the highest in the last four years. This was shown by the Market/CIPS Purchasing Managers' Index a few days ago. This rise is a result of a combination of quire a few things. The high rate of unemployment, the below-rate growth of the wages as well as the austerity measures that are taken up the government of the country have had their effect on the morale of the consumers and have also played a role in the decision of the consumer to pay less. These are the things that have a large effect on the economy of Britain. There were signs that after what had happened to the economy in the year 2011, things have been different. The Bank of England also had made announcement that they are going to put in money further into the economy for its betterment. The feeling of positivism as well as happiness is setting into the economy of UK.
