As one of the biggest releases of the 2011 Christmas holidays, Star Wars: The Old Republic (SWTOR) has steadily increased their subscription to the millions. Separating itself from the traditional form of MMORPG, BioWare and LucasArts made sure the game play focuses solely on a player's actions, interactions, and choices made within the game. With 8 character classes to choose from, you'll be free to pick which faction you want to side with; the light or dark side of the Force. With such a unique story and presentation, you'll soon be attached to your character more than any other MMO games offer.

One of the main factors in achieving success with the game is to have a healthy amount of Star Wars: The Old Republic credits. This currency is constantly used to allow you to buy, sell, and trade merchandise amongst your fellow peers. Having a low amount of SWTOR credits will get you nowhere but face the long hours of farming for gold. To earn some credits, you could accept quests and missions as well as trade for surplus equipment at trading posts. However, such activities could be time consuming. Understandably, a lot of gamers turn to various online gold sellers to buy in-game gold. However, it demands caution on your part so as not to be robbed of your real world money. Possessing experience within the gold-selling industry, Star Wars Old Republic Credits provides the know-how and familiarity on picking the right vendor.

With the game's booming popularity, competition between gold sellers is heavy and aggressive. Websites are constantly updated with reviews on vendors with the best bargain. Having the right amount of SWTOR gold, you can get far by buying all the latest weapon technology and armor. Also, you can make your competitors green with envy by strutting around equipped with rare items and gems. There are multiple ways to earn credits within the game. Most basic and popular is to accept missions and quests which could earn you rewards depending on the difficulty level. There's also trading, crafting and gambling. However, they all take countless hours of repetitive boredom. With trading, you could be flying around planet to planet and still wouldn't be able to find the best trading post with a decent bargain. By purchasing in-game gold you eliminate all these worries and enjoy your time exploring instead.
