Violation of traffic rules sometime leads to uncertain life span: by John Kennedy

Article published on December 8th 2011 | Law

The uncertain life turns more uncertain and insignificant when we move out of the track from our normal daily routines. We all move according to a system and are therefore a vital part of it. We are actually bound to maintain the traffic rules provided by government (as one of the crucial systems needs to be followed). These are made for our own safety only but there avoidance sometime leads to serious issues of road accidents.

Due to ignorance, limited or no knowledge, arrogance, infrastructural deficiency etc, we often see some road accidents as one of the common scenes of roads. Always it is not the fault of drivers or the passerby's but the main thing is that it needs our full consciousness so as not to encounter such conditions because system problems must not be called upon as excuses to escape such situations. Whether drivers or pedestrians, life seems to carry the same importance for everybody. It happens sometime that a pedestrian undergoes an accident due to the fault from the driver's side and here starts his painful journey. Generally, it is seen that the person is left alone after the mishap. But just after his treatment and recovery, he must consider his sufferings seriously and hence search out for an appropriate judgment.
