

Article published on January 6th 2012 | Law

Facing a divorce is almost never easy. There are many issues that need to be addressed and resolved between the parties. While an uncontested divorce is often less confrontational, those issues must still be worked out. Some of the more common issues that couples have to work out deal with division of marital property, child custody, child support, and alimony in some cases.

By filing for an uncontested divorce in Georgia, couples are able to move through the court system quickly. They can also save a lot of money in various costs as well as reduce the emotional stress that often accompanies other types of divorce actions. For many couples, the decision to file for an uncontested divorce is made early on. Often this decision is made before they seek legal assistance. For other couples, a consultation with an Atlanta Divorce Law Firm can be useful in answering whatever questions they may have concerning this type of divorce before they make a decision.

It is important to keep in mind that while issues with property and children have to be resolved, an uncontested divorce cannot be filed if the couple has unresolved disputes in these areas. If those issues are not resolved, the couple may have to file a traditional contested divorce. One benefit to an uncontested divorce is that the proceeding can often occur with little or no court involvement. This is why those issues must be worked out before the couple can file for this type of divorce. Again, consulting with an Atlanta divorce attorney can help couples answer any questions they may have.

The actual process of filing an uncontested divorce is fairly straightforward. An attorney can assist couples in drafting their settlement agreement. In an uncontested divorce, the settlement agreement is a key document that couples often need assistance with not only in drafting but considering what should be in the agreement and what should not. By working an experienced Atlanta law firm, couples can avoid many of the problems often associated with poorly drafted agreements. The time to consider all of the various circumstances couples may face later on is now; not later on when problems may arise that should have been taken care during the settlement discussion and document drafting.

It is always important for couples to keep in mind that in the state of Georgia how a divorce is filed will affect everything else that happens. In a traditional-type of divorce, the person seeking a divorce files a complaint with the court. A copy of this complaint will be served on the other spouse. The person who files for divorce in Georgia is the plaintiff and the person who receives the complaint is the defendant. The complaint is often served on the defendant by the sheriff's office. In Georgia, however, it is not necessary to have a sheriff serve the complaint as long as the other person acknowledges service.

As mentioned above, going through a divorce is almost never easy. But, there are ways to reduce the emotional stress and high-cost of a divorce when couples work with an experienced Atlanta Uncontested Divorce law firm that understands the process and knows how to treat all parties with respect and dignity. If you are considering an uncontested divorce, consider also working with a legal professional who can help you move through the process with as little pain as possible.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/law-articles/what-you-need-know-about-uncontested-divorces-in-georgia.htm> - Article Side

Danielle Paige - About Author:

When Georgia couples decided to split, they often are best served by working with a professional a Atlanta Uncontested Divorce attorney. To learn more, visit a Atlanta Divorce Law Firm.

Article Keywords:

atlanta divorce lawyer, atlanta divorce attorney, divorce lawyer in atlanta, atlanta divorce law firm, atlanta uncontested divorce

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!