

Article published on April 26th 2012 | Marketing

Owning a car is expensive, there are costs coming out of every most minute nook and cranny of your vehicle. Over the initial fortune of buying the machine, there is the constant rising cost of fuel, tax, insurance, maintenance, parking as well as the ever inflating expense of furry dice. To top it all off the added expense of breakdown cover may start to seem like someone's playing a cosmic joke against motorists.

If you only use your car locally and you can keep it well maintained then it might seem like a more effective plan to not bother with breakdown cover and get to know your local garages just in case anything goes awry. But then again you may find months where you are driving more, especially the summer months as you go off driving to the Lake District for a fortnight- you're putting more stress on your car and won't be able to rely on any local garages. This can be a time that lacking breakdown cover poses a real risk as you rely on your car, over filled with all your family, driving incessantly around foreign regions, the situation of a breakdown will be a real nightmare.

This is where the value of temporary breakdown cover comes in, covering those few months when your car is being used more and saving cash on the times you don't need cover.

Although for drivers who rely on taking regular long journeys in their cars they will probably need full time cover, for many people it will provide the perfect balance between security and economy.

Temporary cover can also apply to an individual that doesn't usually drive the car but will be borrowing it for a while. Like a visiting relative or a neighbour who's car might have been stolen. These people won't have been considered on the insurance policy and, as they'll only be using it for a few months won't want to be added to the long term policy, but might need breakdown cover just as much as anybody else, only temporarily.

The cost of temporary cover varies depending on a range of factors. It depends on the age of the vehicle, the age of the driver being covered as well as how long you have been a customer with the your recovery company.

So if you're caught by the added expense of breakdown cover then temporary cover might make the most effective answer.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/marketing-articles/temporary-breakdown-cover-security-and-economy.htm> - Article Side

Tom Green - About Author:

For more information about temporary breakdown deals for your car or motorcycle, or even for a yearly motorcycle breakdown insurance breakdownchoices.co.uk are an excellent a breakdown comparison website who can provide a wealth of valuable information designed to save you money.

Article Keywords:

breakdown comparison website, yearly motorcycle breakdown insurance, temporary breakdown cover

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!