Managed Hosting: a Brief Overview and Benefits by Arunarawat

Article published on June 1st 2012 | Networks

Managed hosting is an important application of the web hosting services provided across the network of hosting servers over the internet. The name is quite suggestive in the sense that managed hosting is indicative that the plans of hosting are usually managed by the hosting service providers. The prices that are required to avail managed hosting services generally fall in the high value category, with a general per month payment structure. The low key hosting plans make use of VPS hosting, which includes hosting over shared servers. On the other hand, the high-end businesses go for dedicated managed hosting plans which are generally reserved for a particular client. Since the price requirements are demanding in these hosting arenas, it is imperative to know the expected services and features from these hosting plan providers in advance before opting for their services.

It is important to judge the quality of services that can be provided by a web hosting firm. Terms such as â€˜fully managedâ€™ are sometimes quoted in their promotion but it is a relative term altogether showcasing their hosting services. Some firms do offer hosting plans that are completely managed by the hosting teams themselves while others may not be pleased with the level of technical support provided by these service providers. Generally, the higher the price demanded, the better is the services and technical sustenance provided. Your website will be monitored round the clock by qualified and experienced personnel. On the contrary, partial managed hosting requires the end-users to perform some administrative functions along with the usual support with the help of some hosting professionals. Thus, itâ€™s better to choose the plan that depends upon your need of technical support.

Managed hosting is particularly useful for small and medium sized business firms. The cost of hiring a full-time hand in order to maintain their websites in-house can be quite high. The availability of a website for a maximum period of time in a day has become necessary and so it would be perfect for a business to outsource their technical requirements to the professions of web hosting firms via managed hosting. It may seem a little costly to avail this type of service to businesses who are accustomed to hiring a shared one but in the long run, it saves costs, resources and time for the maintenance and smooth running of your website.
